secret is to adopt a method, and to use all the spare minutes. I heard the teacher once say, While other fellows are hunting for their pens and paper, Sousa's got his work finished. Then I have been blessed by another faculty. I have never been called upon to use an instrument when comoosing. Other men have to seek the assistance of the piano, but this has never been the case with me. One of the greatest marches I have written was composed when I was pacing the deck of the White Star liner Teutonic on my way across the Atlantic. Tha was 'The Stars and Stripes.'"

Barnett and Ayesha, the two hyp notists who opened an engagement at the Orpheum last night, ran up against a difficulty that threatened to put the show to the bad and in fact practically spoiled what promised to be an unusually good performance. They couldn't get enough volunteers bour of persuasion on the part of Bar nett, the man.

Barnett coaxed, begged and pleaded for volunteers to come up on the stage and be sent to dreamland by the hypnotic eye route, and after half an hour he got six boys. Another period of persuasion was fruitless, and he tried to pull the show through with six, but only one appeared to be a suitable cataleptic subject.

Barnett thereupon, after a whis pered conference in the wings, announced that the audience could get its money back or tickets for another the two passengers in the ill-fated gas- and Circuit courts up to noon today succeeded in getting enough willing enough of the chips fall away to resubjects to fill the chairs on the stage By this time half of the pleasure of
